

DONOVAN, IN TOUR, VISITS BIRTHPLACE

Talks With Bronx Residents in Nostalgic Campaigning

By MURRAY HILSON

James B. Donovan, the Democratic candidate for Senator, mixed politics with sentiment yesterday by visiting the home in the Mott Haven section of the Bronx where he was born 46 years ago.

Mr. Donovan, who now lives in Brooklyn, spent half an hour chatting with residents who remembered his father, the late Dr. John J. Donovan, who practiced medicine in the neighborhood for 47 years until his death 10 years ago.

The candidate's birthplace, a two-story red brick house at 413 East 189th Street, was Dr. Donovan's home for 50 years.

Mr. Donovan toured the south-east Bronx in a ten-car motorcade led by a 44-year-old double-decked bus that once was used on Fifth Avenue.

Seated on the upper deck was a ten-man band of kilted Irish bagpipers, whose swirling tunes contrasted sharply with the Spanish salutations Mr. Donovan received in the area, which is heavily populated by Puerto Ricans.

The tour through the Bronx was billed as Jim Donovan's Day. At his birthplace, Mr. Donovan, standing on the steps of the old house, posed for pictures with his wife, the former Mary McKenna and with two aged aunts and an uncle, Mrs. Thomas Brown and Miss Mary Donovan of 3292 Hull Avenue, and Martin A. Donovan of 3015 Perry Avenue.

Mr. Donovan's brother, the late State Senator John J. Donovan Jr., represented his Bronx district for six terms.

Mr. Donovan, who is opposing Senator Jacob K. Javits, rode in a car with Edward R. Dudley, Manhattan Borough President, who is running for State Attorney General, and John J. Burns, Mayor of Binghamton, the candidate for Lieutenant Governor.

Mr. Donovan told a crowd of about 200 people outside the house, "I grew up here in this neighborhood. Over at St. Jerome's Church on Alexander Avenue, my father was baptized. My father and mother were married there and my grandmother and grandmother-in-law were married there also."

His replacement invited him to the house is now occupied by Dr. Nicholas A. Sallanti, who lost the candidate in.

Mr. Donovan stopped at shopping centers in the Bronx while three girls passed out shopping bags with the legend: "Vote Jim Donovan U. S. Senator, A Man of Ideas and Action."

Mr. Donovan's crowds were sparse but cordial at stops at 188th Street and Willis Avenue, 149th Street and Third Avenue, 162d Street and Prospect Avenue, McKinley Square and 181st Street and Gerard Avenue.

In brief talks, Mr. Donovan called for the election of a Democratic Senator who would give full support to President Kennedy.
